HE HAS PLENTY OF HELP

CPYRGHT

It is easy to understand how President Eisenhower can take so many vacations when you look at the White House line of command.

The list of men who help the President perform his official duties is very imposing, and one fondly wonders how they can all have office room within easy reach of the executive office.

First is Sherman Adams, "The Assistant to the President." Mr. Adams has an assistant in the person of Charles F. Willis Jr.

Attached to the executive office are the following:

Bureau of the Budget: Roland R. Hughes.
Council of Economic Advisers: Arthur F. Burns.
Central Intelligence Agency: Allen W. Dulles.
Operations Co-ordinating Board: Herbert Hoover Jr.
Office of Defense Mobilization: Arthur S. Flemming.
National Security Council: Robert Cutler, also member of the White House Office as special assistant to the President.

The special consultants of the President are as follows:

Lewis L. Straus: Atomic Energy.
Leo Young: Civil Service.
Clarence Francis: Farm-Surplus Disposal.
Lawrence B. Randall: Foreign Trade.
Melvin McCann: Speeches and Reports.
Joseph M. Dodge: Foreign Aid.
Nelson A. Rockefeller: Psychological Warfare.

Then comes the following:

Deputy Assistant to the President, Maj.-Gen. William B. Persons, in charge of Congressional liaison, with Gerald D. Morgan, Hamer H. Gruenther, Jack Martin and Erle D. Chesney as his assistants.

Press Secretaries: James Hagerty and Murray Snyder.

Television Consultant: Robert Montgomery.

Appointments: Thomas E. Stephens.

Cabinet Secretariat: Maxwell M. Rabb and Bradley Patterson.

Departmental Liason and Speeches: Bryce N. Harlow, Robert S. Kieve, William Ewald, Charles F. Masterson and James M. Lambie Jr.

Counsel: Bernard M. Shanley and J. William Barba.

Economics: Gabriel Hauge and Roemer McPhee.

If you had an even three dozen persons under your direct command, all helping to perform the duties of your job you could probably be able to spend at least three days each week on fishing trips or the golf course.
